Use PhilRadar to make academic traveling
- more sustainable

Mention PhilRadar to your colleagues and make our information material accessible by displaying it at your department, forwarding it to members and visiting fellows or using it to plan your events.

Add any events taking place at your institution - like conferences, workshops and talks - to PhilEvents, so speakers and visitors can announce their participation on the radar.

Ask your colleagues and visitors to add their academic travels on the PhilPeople radar.

When planning future event invitations, take existing entries of visiting philosophers into account.

Anyone with a PhilPeople account can add an event you host to PhilEvents - if you add your location, your event will automatically be displayed on the radar - both listed, and on a map

Visitors with a PhilPeople account will then be able to find and assign themselves to your event, both as speakers and as attendees

Add an event

Are you attending or speaking at an event that has been submitted to PhilEvents? Search for the event below to add it to your profile and inform your followers. If the event has not already been submitted to PhilEvents, you can do so here.

Get on the Radar

You can get on the PhilPeople Radar by adding Trips to your profile. You can either do so manually, or as a side-effect of adding an event to your profile that you are attending or speaking at.

This page is only visible to you. Trip information of other users is only accessible via the Radar. If you don't want your trips accessible via the Radar, then mark them as 'hidden'. You can opt-out of radar listings in your settings here. Opting-out makes all of your trips hidden by default

▲ New trips will be visible by default

No trips are currently on record

PhilRadar lets you add trips and events to your personal page

Assign yourself to events created by organisers or manually enter the duration of your trip
